It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

FOREWORD

When the History Committee of the 139th Infantry put the production of this book into the hands of the Guard Publishing Company early in September, 1919, that company arranged with me to write it. Many difficulties have arisen in the collection of data, principally through my inability to obtain the regimental records.

Officers and men of the regiment have resumed their civilian pursuits and some of them have wandered far afield since they were discharged from the army, so far indeed that letters and telegrams are unanswered. The Regimental History, which would have been of great assistance, has not been found. Such officers and men as I have been able to get in touch with have been most kind and helpful, and whatever value the book has is due to them.

I am fully aware that the narrative given here does not do justice to the fine regiment with which it deals, but no book could do that. The great bravery of these men, the grim persistence, the fortitude in the face of great odds, have made for them a fame which should live forever.

My poor words cannot add to their glory. All I can hope to do is briefly to tell their story and offer a book which will preserve the pictures of these gallant men in the uniforms they wore with so much honor on the fields of France.

VAUQUOIS HILL AND CHAUDRON FARM

The crosses in the snow-covered field of Chaudron Farm are at the heads of graves of 35th Division men.

The picture of the top of Vauquois Hill was made from an airplane at a height of about 400 feet. The craters were made by mines exploded by the French and Germans before we entered the war. Trenches can be seen on either side.

A COMPANY

ONE of the firm convictions of natives of Missouri and Kansas used to be that the citizens of the other state were a bad lot. This impression came down from the days when we Missourians, out of the goodness of our hearts, used to go over into Kansas and help them hold their elections. Even before Kansas was a state, Missourians were trying to lead them onward and upward to better things. We took them by the hand, led them to the ballot box, showed them how to vote, told them which way to vote, voted ourselves to give them the benefit of our example. Often we voted for them when they were backward or timorous. Did they appreciate it? They did not. They called us many things that were not pleasant to listen to. We called them things which sounded even worse. Twenty years ago the boys in any respectable Missouri school had a bitter contempt for Kansas and its people. In my own family there was an uncle who moved to Kansas and bought a farm. We spoke in low tones of him in the family circle afterward.

Now all that feeling has passed away. The prejudice and intolerance of Civil War days are forgotten. The only rivalry is in the tilt yards of trade, and the only bitterness is upon the foot-ball field. The last vestige of this old rancor was swept away by regiments such as the 139th Infantry of the United States Army. This regiment was made up of the 4th Missouri Infantry and the 3rd Kansas Infantry, two National Guard outfits of enduring fame. They were united soon after they were called to the colors, they were trained as one unit. By the time they were sent to France, all state lines had been lost. In France they worked and learned and trained and fought as one man. The 139th Infantry came out of the Argonne with its bloody head held high in air. No prouder outfit ever stepped than the ragged band which trailed back to Somaisne with the guns roaring behind it and the relieving troops holding the position the regiment had conquered in the valley of the Aire.

To start this story properly and to give the reader an accurate conception of the men and traditions that made this regiment, it is best to look over the records of the two regiments which were joined to make the One Hundred Thirty-ninth.

The first 3rd Kansas Volunteers were recruited by Senator James H. Lane in the summer of 1861. It was an infantry regiment with calvary and artillery companies. Certain companies of this 3rd Regiment were on active duty from 1861 to 1864. In October, 1864, General Sterling Price of the Confederate Army crossed the Kansas border from Missouri, and threatened to raid the state. Nearly all of the 3rd Regiment including the Battery and Companies O and P took part in the opposition to General Price.

In 1884 there was a 3rd Kansas National Guard Regiment, and it existed until the outbreak of the Spanish-American War in 1898. After the Spanish-American War, plans for re-organization of the National Guard provided for only two regiments of infantry, and so from 1898 until 1917 there was no 3rd Kansas Infantry of the National Guard. As soon as permission was given by the Federal Government in 1917, Brigadier General Charles I. Martin commenced the organization of a unit to be known as the 3rd Kansas Infantry.

A COMPANY

The 1st Kansas Infantry was, generally speaking, in the eastern part of the state, and the 2nd Kansas Infantry was in the western part, but both were pretty well scattered. The 3rd Regiment was raised without regard to geography, and came from that territory which would be covered by a triangle drawn from Leavenworth to Downs to Eldorado.

The conditions under which the regiment was raised made it possible to assign to companies officers who came from towns other than those in which the companies were raised. General Martin himself selected the officers of the regiment, and it had an excellent personnel.

The new regiment was without equipment other than that supplied by the local committee. It was called into Federal service August 5, 1917 and was sent to Doniphan on September 26, 1917. H Company did not go to Doniphan on that date as it was quarantined because of sickness among the men. The affairs of the regiment were administered from Topeka from August 5, to September 26.

The men of this new 3rd Infantry Regiment of the Kansas National Guard were not the descendants of the old 3rd Kansas regiments, and there were no traditions to connect the new regiment with the old ones, but they were husky young Kansans of the same breed and from the same land that the men of the other 3rd Kansas regiments had been.

The 4th Missouri Infantry was organized March 1, 1891. It was composed of seven companies and Colonel J. A. Arbuthnot was its first commander. It was located generally in the northern part of the state, and many towns have been represented in its organization. The forming and mustering-out of companies have gone on steadily since that time.

Concerning the early life of the regiment Col. William E. Stringfellow says:

"In those days, there was no state appropriation for the maintenance of the companies. Equipment was issued. The companies had to be maintained by the officers and men. Some small amount in dues was paid by each member and the officers had to dig up to supply the deficiencies. We held our annual encampments much in the manner that a street carnival is held. We approached the various towns in north and northwest Missouri of suitable size to be interested, and saw what they would allow us in the way of camping grounds, wood and water, and anything else we might get, including a percentage of the receipts of a sham battle, which usually was given as the principal means of obtaining any ready cash. The officers made up the deficiency.

"From the date of my acquaintance with the regiment, which was practically at the beginning of its organization, there has been a high degree of military spirit and willingness to serve on the part of a nucleus, which spirit has been maintained until now, and it is my sincere belief that a part of the splendid spirit shown by the One Hundred Thirty-ninth in France was due to the esprit de corps created in the early days and maintained until now."

The regiment volunteered for service in the Spanish-American

A COMPANY

War, was mustered into Federal service May 16, 1898, and was mobilized at Jefferson Barracks. On May 25, it moved to Camp Alger, Pennsylvania, where it was assigned to the 2nd Brigade of the 2nd Division of the 2nd Army Corps. It was brigaded with the 4th Pennsylvania and the 6th Illinois. On August 20, 1898 it moved to Camp Meade, Pennsylvania and in November moved to Greenville, South Carolina. It was discharged from Federal service at Camp Weatherill, South Carolina, February 10, 1899.

The regiment continued its course of changes in personnel and location and maintained its existence without a break up to June 23, 1916, when it reported at Nevada, under the order of the President for duty on the Mexican border. On July 4, 1916, it departed for Laredo, in three special trains. It was commanded by Col. John D. McNeely. On the Mexican border it had an interesting tour of duty until February 21, 1917, when it moved to Ft. Riley, Kansas. It was formally released from Federal service February 28, 1917.

The regiment was reviewed by General Funston who praised it highly for its soldierly bearing and discipline. Just before it left the border two companies, A of Tarkio and B of Caruthersville, made a remarkable hike. These companies were stationed at San Ygnacio, 45 miles from regimental headquarters at Laredo. Under command of Major Clay C. Macdonald they left San Ygnacio at 5 minutes to 3 in the afternoon and marched to headquarters. The roads were narrow, rocky and sandy, and it was in the dark of the moon, but they reached their destination the next morning at 7 o'clock. They lost but two men to the ambulance. The 45 miles were made in 16 hours, or leaving out the rest for supper and the 5 and 10 minute rest periods on the march, a marching time of 13 hours. The last 12 miles of the march was covered in 3 hours and 5 minutes. Major Macdonald was the first officer inducted into Federal service in May, 1917, and the only officer who served with the regiment in the Spanish War, on the Mexican border and in France.

Among its officers on the border were Major Macdonald, commanding the 1st Battalion; Captain Williamson, commanding D Company; Major James E. Rieger, commanding the 2nd Battalion; Captain Wilson, commanding G Company; Captain McQueen, commanding H Company and Major Stepp, commanding the 3rd Battalion. We shall hear of these men again in France.

Major Ralph Ramer who served with the South Carolina troops in the world war, Major Donald Bonfoey who served on the Border and in France, and Captain Donald Duncan of the Marines, who fell in battle near Chateau Thierry, all had their training with the old Fourth Missouri.

When the 139th Regiment, U. S. Infantry was formed, A Company was made by joining A Company of the 3rd Kansas and A Company of the 4th Missouri. The ranking Captain took command of the company. Since the Kansas regiment had been newly organized, most of the regimental and company commands went to Missouri officers for the time being. Displaced officers were attached, or were sent to the Depot Brigade. Colonel McNeely commanded the regiment and to assist, advise and instruct him there was a procession of regular army officers, none of whom stayed long with the regiment.

A COMPANY

All through the training period at Camp Doniphan, a dreary and unrelieved spell of work, officers and men were upheld by the thought that much good would come out of it. Incidents and events at the time seemed to have great importance, but they are now virtually forgotten. It was the same with the journey to the Atlantic seaboard, the exciting voyage to England and thence to France. Things that made the greatest impression then have passed out of the memory, or are at best but faint wisps of recollections.

Even the work with the British in the north of France, when the regiment was near to the battle lines, and the later days in the Vosges, when the troops went into the trenches, are dim now.

Nearly all of these things have been thrown into memory's discard by the great days of the Argonne. Trench raids, patrols in No-Man's land, excursions to repair barbed wire entanglements were great events in the Vosges and they all did have an important bearing on the future fitness of the regiment, but the things that we thought always would be high-lights in our recollection became very dim after five days of battle in the valley of the Aire.

During the stay in the Vosges, Lieutenant Thomas Hopkins lost his life. The 137th Infantry, which joined up with the 139th Infantry in the trenches, made a trench raid on the morning of July 20. A wounded soldier was caught in the wire. Lieutenant Hopkins saw this man's predicament from his post and though he had nothing to do with the raid, went to aid the wounded man. In doing so he passed unhurt through an enemy barrage, but in assisting the

He was promoted to Colonel for his work in battle. He was a hard taskmaster on the drill ground, but won the love of his regiment by his valor on the field, and his untiring devotion to his men.

wounded man to cover, Lieutenant Hopkins was himself fatally wounded.

The Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre were both awarded to Lieutenant Hopkins and an American Legion Post in his home in Wichita, Kansas has been named for him.

The regiment also lost Captain Alexander M. Ellett in the Vosges. He was commanding I Company and had done, excellent work in rounding the company into shape. Near Amiens in the spring, his company won first place in the competitive drill within the battalion and one of his platoons won first place in the competition among platoons. His company in the Vosges occupied the town of Metzeral. The explosion of a hand-grenade while he was inspecting an intermediate line of defense caused wounds from which Captain Ellett died before reaching the hospital.

Captain Charles H. Browne, who had commanded H Company of the 3rd Kansas and later E Company of the One Hundred Thirty-ninth and who had done such good work in Alsace was sent back home as an instructor August 11. He became a Major and while he never saw the Argonne, the work he had done in training the men lived after him on that field.

Colonel McNecley, who had commanded the regiment at Doniphan was relieved after several weeks in France. He was promoted to a corps job and did not see any further service with the One Hundred Thirty-ninth. But I am sure he would have forgone the promotion for the privilege of staying with his outfit.

B COMPANY

The 139th Infantry was 3208 men and 79 officers strong on September 25, the day before the Argonne offensive opened. Lieutenant-Colonel Carl L. Ristine was in command. It had been the intention to have Colonel Americus Mitchell lead the regiment, but he arrived late. The regiment, with the One Hundred Fortieth, formed the 70th Brigade. The attack was made by the 69th Brigade, with the 137th Regiment on the left half of the divisional front. The 139th Regiment advanced behind the One Hundred Thirty-seventh. While the forward regiments, the One Hundred Thirty-seventh and One Hundred Thirty-eighth, were becoming tangled and mixed because of the fighting in the fog, Ristine succeeded in keeping his regiment clear and in order. The regiment moved forward in columns of battalions with companies and platoons in staggered formation. As the One Hundred Thirty-ninth approached the defenses of Varennes, it found the One Hundred Thirty-seventh was immediately in front of it and held up by the opposition. The One Hundred Thirty-ninth dug in, as there was considerable artillery fire and waited. It was not long before the reserve battalion of the One Hundred Thirty-seventh came up behind the One Hundred Thirty-ninth. This battalion had been in some way passed by the One Hundred Thirty-ninth in the advance. Ristine waited two hours, then went forward and asked Colonel Hamilton, commanding the One Hundred Thirty-seventh, what delayed his advance. Colonel Hamilton's regiment had suffered from inter-mingling and mixture of troops and when it was stopped by the Varennes defenses and had lain for some time under the heavy and concentrated fire upon it, the Colonel was doubtful whether or not he could make headway against the enemy position.

Ristine returned to his regiment and sent a runner to the Brigade Commander, telling him of the condition of the One Hundred Thirty-seventh and asking permission to take the One Hundred Thirty-ninth forward and continue the fight. He received no answer to that message or to another similar one which he sent afterwards. The One Hundred Thirty-ninth was beginning to suffer from the bombardment and Ristine feared that the morale of his outfit would go down if he held them inactive any longer. Being unable to get any answer from his Brigade Commander he put his regiment in formation and went forward. The order was: Scouts, a skirmish line, the 3rd Battalion, 1st Battalion, 2nd Battalion.

The most of the town of Varennes lies across the River Aire from the 35th Division's sector. On our bank of the river there were a good number of houses and a ruined church. All of these are situated in the low and flat hollow places under the river bank. The hills around run to the right like the rim of a cup. Ristine did not attack frontally, but took his command around the hills with very little damage to the regiment and as soon as the Germans found him in their rear, they evacuated the position. There was not much stiff fighting. He merely "pinched out" the place.

The regiment had proceeded possibly a kilometer further, when the front line slowed up. Ristine, again becoming concerned about the morale of his outfit, told Major Stepp to take command of the regiment while he went forward and took command of the skirmish line. He had advanced about 200 meters when a runner came to him and said that a major over on his right wanted assistance. Ristine moved to the right and there found the gallant Rieger with about 100 men, trying to breach the line. After cleaning up Vauquois Hill and the Bois de Rossignol, he had come up to the right of the regiment and finding the One Hundred Thirty-seventh stopped had tried to drive a wedge through the enemy line to relieve the One Hundred Thirty seventh. He had driven a wedge into it, but with his small command also had been stopped and was fighting desperately when Ristine's advance came to his assistance. Ristine put Rieger in command of the right wing and told him to push on towards Very.

Ristine who had strengthened his skirmish line, drove straight ahead destroying everything before him and finally reached a point about a kilometer and a half south of Charpentry, where he ran into a very heavy enfilading fire. He told his detachment to dig in and wait for the regiment to come up. When the regiment failed to appear, Ristine left his skirmish line, holding the front, and went back to the regiment. There he learned Major Stepp had been killed and the regiment had not moved. He reformed his command in a column of battalions and took the regiment forward and the men dug in just back of the skirmish line at nightfall.

Rieger had volunteered for the mopping up of Vauquois Hill and the Bois de Rossignol. Captains Wilson and McQueen had matched coins for the privilege. Wilson with two companies had attended to the Vauquois job, while McQueen had kept his place in the regimental organization. It was on the slopes of Vauquois Hill that Lieutenant Donald M. Macdonald was killed, valorously leading his men over the net work of enemy defenses.

Writing to Mrs. Stepp, Chaplain Daniel Lane thus described Major Stepp's death:

"It was just at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of this first day of the engagement when our beloved Major fell. We were emerging from the valley by the German cemetery on the Eastern suburbs of Varennes, walking up the narrow gauge railway turning to the right and walking up to the forks of the Cheppy-Varennes and Charpentry roads and mounted to the summit of the opposite hill. There had been a hush unnatural, as we reached the summit overlooking the valley in which these devastated towns lay. It was broken by the storm which burst furiously upon us. I was carrying my Major's Musette bag and was a few steps in advance when the enemy's fire swept the heights. The last picture I have of your dear brave husband is the best. It better reveals the unselfish, brave warrior that he was. Thinking not of himself at all he stood fearlessly and wheeled about to order his men to stay below when a bullet hit its mark and he fell, pierced through the brain without an instant's pain, save that last thought for the welfare of his men."

Major Samuel G. Clarke was in command of the 1st Battalion on the evening of September 25. The 1st Battalion, less C Company which had been detailed for duty at Neuville, left the woods with the regiment and marched to the jumping off place. Everybody got a little sleep except the scouts, who were busy all night locating the best passages of the river. After receiving the reports of the scouts it was decided to take the whole regiment over the railroad crossing. The 1st Battalion crossed immediately behind the Third and took position 500 meters in the rear of the Third early on the morning of Sept. 26. When the advance began, at 5:30 a.m., it was necessary to use the scouts in order to keep the prescribed distance behind the 3rd Battalion. Early on this morning, Captain Cater joined the 1st Battalion with C Company. The advance, which was 500 meters in the rear of the 3rd Battalion, was with companies D and A in the lead and companies B and C about 400 meters in the rear. The companies advanced in line of platoon columns.

The only work the battalion had to do that morning was to keep the prescribed distance behind the 3rd Battalion and to send back a message every half hour, all of which was accurately and promptly done.

Lieutenant Ridlon was the scout leader and Captain Morgan was charged with the direction of the lines. The Battalion advanced through the fog with nothing of great interest to report until about noon, when it halted in the rear of the 137th Infantry. The men took advantage of what little cover there was, as the position was being shelled at intervals and during this halt a good many men were wounded.

Major Clarke organized the battalion to be ready for the advance and finally word came to him that the One Hundred Thirty-ninth was to go through the One Hundred Thirty-seventh and attack. The Third Battalion led the way through, the First was behind it 500 meters and in the rear was the 2nd Battalion. All three battalions suffered more or less from the enemy barrage and from the front, rifle fire was beginning to liven up. Enemy machine guns were very active, and this, with the heavy artillery made a terrific din. Finally the combined fire of the opposition halted the 3rd Battalion and it dug in for the night. Major Stepp had been killed, Rieger was with his outfit, and Ristine had gone back to headquarters for orders and conference, so Clarke found himself in command of the regiment. Captain Nesbitt with his machine guns protected the right flank, and men from the 1st Battalion were placed as outposts along the entire left flank. Machine gun fire on the forward elements of the 3rd Battalion was kept up all night and a German patrol which tried to penetrate the lines during the night was repulsed.

While Major Clarke had every confidence in the judgement of Lieutenant Davidson, who had placed the outposts, he thought it the part of wisdom to inspect them himself. Major Clarke's orderly and all the officers in his P. C. were asleep, so he went forward alone, got lost a time or two, and finally ran into a bunch of wounded soldiers who were trying to devise a way to get to the rear. He put them in a protected place, sent for assistance for them and after inspecting the outposts and wandering about for a while in the darkness and rain decided he had better go back to his own Battalion Post of Command. He thinks he fell over a hundred men in trying to find that

P. C. He finally reached it and soon was asleep but was almost immediately awakened by a runner who said the Regimental Adjutant wanted to know if he would not come at once to the regimental P. C., as he was expecting the Germans to attack on our left. No attack came and about dawn Ristine returned. He gave out information concerning the advance and placed the 1st Battalion in the line with the Third. Major Clarke went back to his battalion to give the necessary orders for the advance. In getting into position the air seemed alive with machine gun bullets. Everybody walked close to the ground. A sudden machine gun burst pinned Major Williamson and Major Clarke to the ground. Williamson was hit on the left side, but not badly hurt. Clarke was hit four times with machine gun bullets, once in the left wrist, once in the left leg and two minor wounds in the right leg below the knee. His left leg was useless, but he remained where he was for some time, thinking it might be possible for him to go forward again when the time came.

He crawled a little to the rear to get into the path of the litter bearers and he thought he would be able to stay throughout the day, but Colonel Ristine saw him and ordered that he be taken to the rear. So ended his part in the Meuse-Argonne Battle. He was in the hospital until November 25, then returned to duty, but had to go back to the hospital again as he was not yet fit. He finally rejoined the regiment December 21, 1918.

On September 27, the second day of the battle, the attack was to be resumed at 5:30 a.m. by the 70th Brigade which had been in support on the first day. It was not necessary for the One Hundred

B COMPANY

Thirty-ninth to effect a passage of lines in order to be in position to attack as it had done this the day before in front of Varennes. The One Hundred Thirty-ninth attacked with two battalions in the front line and one in support. A machine gun company was attached to each of the front line battalions. Ristine did not order his men forward until 6:30 a.m. He had tried to get the time delayed until 8:30 when there would be a chance of getting artillery support. He felt sure that there would be no artillery support at 5:30, as promised. The artillery had not opened at 6:30. Ristine sent a message to Brigade Headquarters telling them he was ready to attack but that there was no artillery fire. He got no reply to this message, so he attacked without any help from the big guns. The German artillery and machine guns had been well placed so as to sweep the territory over which the One Hundred Thirty-ninth had to advance. The regiment was able to go ahead but it was paying a very heavy price.

In writing of a battle, authors are too prone to accept the easy way of referring to an outfit by the name of the commander. In every instance the present writer knows of, the fights have been won and the credit should go to the enlisted men. If the text says, "Jones moved forward 500 yards," it is hoped the reader will know that it was the doughboys who did it. They carried the rifles, they forced back the enemy and they took the wounds. A proper history, to be complete, would have the names of the individual soldiers and would recite their deeds, but we are not now far enough advanced to do that.

It is useless to repeat that the men of the 139th Infantry

RIEGER OF EXERMONT

"On the morning of September 26, Major James E. Rieger with his battalion made the frontal attack on the heights of Vauquois, capturing this almost impregnable position in forty minutes. Reorganizing his battalion he pushed forward and on the evening of September 27, without regard for his own safety, personally led the charge into Charpentry with such speed and dash that a large body of the enemy were cut off and captured. He, with his battalion, captured the foremost point reached by the Division."—From his citation.

fought with superlative fortitude and daring, but it would be true to write that at the end of every day's story.

Ristine balanced the cost in men against the profit of ground gained and decided he was in a losing business, so he ordered the regiment to halt and told the men to dig in. He notified brigade headquarters that he could advance no further without artillery support. That was about 10 o'clock in the morning of September 27.

About 11 a.m. word was brought forward of tanks in the rear. Ristine sent messages to the officers of the tanks commanding them to come forward with all speed. They came and he placed them on his right wing, formed the infantry behind them and ordered the advance to be resumed. Artillery and anti-tank fire was so heavy that it drove the tanks from the field. This left the right of the 139th Regiment's line well ahead of the left. The troops dug in again, and held fast.

Our artillery was beginning to open and Ristine sent word to Brigade Headquarters that he could move forward if he had a 30 minute destructive fire on Charpentry and Baulny and a barrage in front of that part of his line which was east of the road. He received no reply to this message, so he pulled his right back to straighten the line and again ordered the men to dig in. He called a meeting of battalion and company commanders and this meeting was in session at 5 p.m. when he received an order to attack at 5:30 p.m. Ristine sent his officers scurrying back to their commands.

This order had been inspired by a sharp message General Traub had received from General Pershing. This order read as follows:

C COMPANY

27 September, 4:30 p.m.

From C. in C.

He expects the 35th Division to move forward. He is not satisfied with the Division being stopped by machine gun nests here and there. He expects the division to move forward now in accordance with orders.

Lieutenant Cosgrove and Captain Brown, Regimental Adjutant, already were dead in that day's fighting. Both were daring and brilliant fighters. The casualties among the enlisted men had been heavy, but the regiment came out of its fox holes at 5:30 and went ahead with a rush. They guided to the left and got a heavy fire from machine guns and artillery, but they went ahead cleaning up machine gun nests as they went and before they stopped both Charpentry and Baulny had been taken. They had broken through the German line which had stopped them twice already that day.

Lieutenant Axline of E Company was killed as he was taking his platoon through a passage in the wire northwest of Charpentry. A machine gun bullet hit him in chest. He covered the wound with his hand and stood by until the entire detachment was out of the wire and going ahead. He then fell behind, crawled into a shell hole and died.

When the attacking troops finally stopped, Rieger's battalion lay in the edge of Montrebeau Wood and the regiment had to its credit the capture that evening of Charpentry, Baulny and the Chaudron Farm. One must study the map and take into account the difficulties of the terrain fully to understand the work the 139th Infantry had done in the first two days of this battle. Defenses and strong points which had an evil fame all along the battle line had fallen before the dash and impetuous courage of Ristine's men. On the night of September 27 the regiment lay well beyond Baulny. Captain Haftle, commanding the 3rd Battalion, dug in there. Rieger was in Montrebeau Wood and the 1st Battalion was not far from Chaudron Farm.

Lieut. Carlisle Wilson who was afterward promoted to Captain was wounded when the regiment was attacking Charpentry. He was operating with his company as a protection for the left flank and was near Montblainville. He had crossed the River Aire and driven out the enemy machine gunners who threatened the success of the attack. Montblainville was in the 28th Division's sector, but they were far behind and Wilson cleaned up the neighborhood of Montblainville effectively. He died of his wounds. No braver man than Wilson fought in the Argonne. His fighting spirit was shown early on the football field where he became Captain of the University of Missouri team.

Thinking that he could prevent mixing up of the troops, Ristine had taken charge of his own skirmish line, and pressed ahead too rapidly. Finally only Lieutenant McCord accompanied him, and they became separated in crossing a small stream. McCord guided to the left and, unable to find his colonel, joined a party which penetrated far into the enemy territory near the bank of the river.

Ristine went ahead. He believed the American front line was still in front of him and seeing some soldiers through the dusk climbing a hill across the valley made this belief stronger. They were the retreating Germans, but he was not close enough to them to distinguish their uniforms. Indeed our troops had stopped and there was nothing ahead of Ristine but the Germans. He reached a hill just south of the valley which leads to Exermont and found himself quite near one of these lines of troops. "What outfit is this?" he yelled through the gathering darkness, but got no answer. He drew nearer and found it was a German outfit in retreat.

The Colonel was up against it. What he knew of the terrain he had learned from the map and it had now grown so dark that he could not put this knowledge to any use. He had lost his flash light, and probably would not have dared to examine his map even if he had had the light. He was in a quandary. He surely did not want to be surrounded by the enemy and he had a natural reluctance to retire from a retreating foe. With him at this time were a lieutenant and five privates of the 137th Infantry, whom he had run across on the field after leaving McCord. The seven men went to the crest of the hill and crawled into a big new shell hole. They organized it by digging the soft earth out of the bottom and putting it around the rim for a barricade. They had made four automatic rifle positions in the sides of the hole, when a German machine gun began to shoot across their position. Soon it appeared that two guns were crossing their fire over the shell hole.

After a period of waiting, Ristine decided the detachment could do better as individuals and gave each man permission to look out for himself. Ristine explained to them his idea, which was to crawl out of the hole towards the German lines some 200 yards, and then to try and find the way back to the American lines. He was sure that a direct retreat was cut off. Ristine set out alone. He crawled for a long distance towards the enemy, then turned and walked parallel to the position he supposed the lines to occupy.

By this time it was very dark. Ristine could see that the Germans were in retreat. The American artillery was putting a slight interdiction fire on the territory and its results were to keep the Germans from grouping. This helped Ristine as there were many other individual soldiers wandering about besides himself. The night was very dark and a cold, hard rain was falling. The Colonel was wet and hungry. The Germans were in retreat and, naturally, virtually all of the movement was backwards but there was the incidental movement of men forward and up and down the lines. At a dug out apparently deserted Ristine found a German officer's kit all laid out ready to be packed. The American Colonel had no overcoat, so he took the one which belonged to the German officer and put it on. Then as he walked on he figured out a course of action which he thought would render him least open to suspicion. This plan was to act as nearly as possible as he supposed a German officer moving about would act under similar circumstances. Whenever he came near a working party or near to anyone else who would be likely to observe him, he pretended to be very busy and in a great hurry. He hustled by soldiers as if some very important affair had been entrusted to him. He figured that he was not likely to be discovered in the intense darkness, if he did not make an open attempt to reach the American lines. Whenever he came to a road he proceeded along it as if he knew it thoroughly and knew exactly where he was going. Whenever he found himself comparatively alone, he stopped and endeavored to orient himself, in order to find the road for home, but whenever anyone approached, he immediately became very busy again.

He had decided that if he were challenged and found he was unable to bluff his way through gruffly, as he assumed a German officer would do, he would shoot the challenger and run for it toward the American lines. He reasoned that since he was an American Colonel, caught inside the German line, he would rather take his chances on fighting his way out than to be taken prisoner. He might have got away with this if he had been challenged. During the more than 24 hours he was inside the German lines, he carried his Colt's automatic pistol in his hand, usually inside his overcoat pocket.

Dawn found him still within the German lines. Throughout the night he found no opportunity to return to his own people. He had wandered almost to Chateau Chehery and he saw the retreating enemy blowing up ammunition dumps near Fleville. From the light of these flames he could see other ammunition dumps near by and he noted these to be located on the map when he might have the opportunity of seeing it again. Just before daylight, Ristine found himself near a field through which ran an untrimmed hedge. He crawled under the rows of the hedge and crept stealthily forward until he found a place from which he could watch both sides. Then he made himself as comfortable as he could to spend the day.

C COMPANY

There he lay all day long. Along the road from Apremont, which he could see on his right, a German battery of four cannon came and took position not far from the hedge. After that several machine gunners also took position in the open field. They made emplacements in little fox holes and stuck branches of hedge brush up in front of them. Ristine had an excellent opportunity that day to observe the work of German artillery and machine guns. Twice during the day he heard sounds from the American lines which were full of meaning for him. He heard the tanks enter Baulny and he heard the American guns open. This showed him the artillery had come forward. Some of the shells fell near to Ristine and while the German artillery was not hurt, one shell got a fair hit on a machine gun emplacement.

When night came he had a good idea of his position and as soon as it was thoroughly dark he crawled out of the hedge and started down the main National Fleville highway. He passed several artillery emplacements and an occasional soldier, but was never challenged. The German overcoat doubtless served him well. Finally he saw the River Aire, but between him and the river was a heavy band of barbed wire. In climbing over it some of the rotten posts broke, once a machine gun traversed across the top of the wire and another time flares were sent up. Each time he lay still and finally crossed the wire and slipped down into the river. It was too deep to wade and he was afraid to try to swim it. Although an athlete, he was much weakened as he had had no sleep for 72 hours and very little food. After three attempts to wade, he finally found a tree which had been felled across the river, walked over it and so reached a brigade headquarters of the 28th Division.

On the morning of September 28, Ristine was in the German lines, but that was unknown to the other officers of the regiment. Captain Brown, Regimental Adjutant, was dead, many other officers were wounded and the Regimental Headquarters was virtually wiped out. Every battalion had suffered heavily, the 3rd battalion was commanded by a Lieutenant, the 1st Battalion was commanded by a Captain, but he had only one officer for each company. Rieger still held his second battalion together.

Through the tangle of Montrebeau Wood Rieger pushed slowly ahead. There was much enemy infantry and many machine gunners, but despite the oppositions he finally reached the upper edge of the wood, where he dug in at night. In Montrebeau Wood, Colonel Americus Mitchell appeared, looking for the 139th Regiment which he was to command. A cold rain was falling, it was very dark, the enemy was sullenly shelling the wood and Colonel Mitchell was unable to locate any elements of his command.

It should be remembered that throughout its part of the Argonne battle, the 139th Infantry, except for a few hours, did not move, maneuver or fight as a regimental unit. Here was a unit, battalion company, platoon or squad, under its special commander doing a certain duty; yonder was another unit doing another duty. The men fought just as gallantly and effectively on the night of the 27th and all through the day of the 28th as they did at any other time, and the losses were very heavy.

It was on September 28 that Lieutenant Everett B. Mosier met his death. This officer was new to the regiment, but had made a very good impression. He had been an athlete and sportsman in Philadelphia when the United States entered the war. He was one of the organizers of the Philadelphia District Lawn Tennis Association and was considered probably the best racket player in Philadelphia. He had applied for admission to the first officers' training camp, passed the physical examination, but was not called. He then applied for admission to the Fort Oglethorpe training camp but was not called there. Soon afterward he was drafted. In January, 1918, he was selected for the third officers' training camp at Camp Gordon, passed satisfactorily and was sent to France in May. July 18 he was commissioned Second Lieutenant and transferred from the 82nd Division to the 35th Division.

On this day he was leading parts of two companies of the 2nd Battalion near the edge of Montrebeau Wood. The Germans, filtering forward threatened to surround him. He ordered his men to fall back for safety, but before this was possible for many of them, the detachment was surrounded. The last seen of Mosier he was fighting desperately with a few of his men. He was entirely surrounded by the Germans. He and this little band did not surrender, but died fighting. He was at first listed as missing, but his grave was found afterwards about 700 yards north of Chaudron Farm.

Captain Dale was killed on September 28. He was in command of F Company and had helped to take Charpentry. E, F and H companies pushed forward and drove the Germans out of their position near Chaudron Farm and took the hedge to the north of it on the evening of September 27. Supports from the One Hundred Thirty-seventh and One Hundred Thirty-eighth came forward on the morning of September 28 and this movement brought heavy enemy artillery fire upon the advanced line of the One Hundred Thirty-ninth. Captain Dale was hit by a 77 shell. His fox hole was about fifteen feet from Rieger's. The explosion threw dirt over Rieger and knowing that the shell had hit nearby he called to Dale but got no answer. Rieger went over to Dale's fox hole and found him dead.

At Divisional Headquarters, acting as Divisional Mail officer, was Major Clay C. Macdonald, a tall, elderly man, who had been placed in that position because it was assumed he was too old for duty on the battle line. He had been a National Guardsman from his youth up and all of his service had been with the 4th Missouri and the 139th Infantry, into which it had been merged. He was at Headquarters when he was told his son, Lieutenant Donald Malcolm Macdonald had been killed on Vauquois Hill. He received the information unmoved, as a soldier must, and went at once into the headquarters of General Traub and demanded that he have an assignment in the front line where he might hazard his own body in the fortunes of war after the manner of his clan. He was immediately sent forward.

On the night of September 28, he was in Montrebeau Wood. He took detachments of B and D Companies and put Lieutenant McCord in immediate command and with them formed a line facing the enemy. Major Macdonald on September 29 took command of A and B Companies by direction of Colonel Ristine. Lieutenant McCord on September 29 was wounded and sent to the rear. On the morning of September 30 Major Macdonald, still capable and efficient, turned over A and B Companies to Captain Williamson, commanding the 1st Battalion of the One Hundred Thirty-ninth, and under orders of Colonel Mitchell took command of the 2nd Battalion of the 137th Infantry and formed a line just in the rear of that line held by Stayton and the Engineers. He stayed with the One Hundred Thirty-seventh until the regiment was withdrawn, when he was returned to the One Hundred Thirty-ninth where he took command of his old battalion. Despite his 61 years, Major Macdonald endured great physical hardships and the pounding and wear of battle better than some of the younger men and when he came home it was as a Lieutenant-Colonel, a promotion won on the field.

On the morning of September 26, the morning which, as one officer grimly said, was "to separate the men from the boys," Captain Heiny was one of many men who wondered how he was going to stand the strain. It was a dubious question with him. Four days later, after he had taken two severe wounds and had kept fighting with the forward elements at all times and had voluntarily gone forward through an enemy barrage to get information, there was not much doubt in any body else's mind as to whether he was a soldier.

The morning of September 29 dawned dark and gray on the Argonne battle field. A cold rain was falling steadily, and the hungry troops were soaked and chilled. The dreary untended field which lay between the northern edge of Montrebeau Wood and the town of Exermont was most desolate and repelling.

The 35th Division was ordered to take Exermont and push as far beyond as it could. The Corps' orders transmitted to General Traub said specifically the troops must advance without regard to the division on either side. The division's front already made a salient in the enemy's line and further pushing forward of this salient meant that the advancing troops would receive fire not only from their front, but from both flanks.

The division was a division in name only now. Brigade and Division Headquarters had almost ceased to function. The effectives in charge of the direction of the troops were the regimental, battalion and company organizations. What semblance there was to the 70th Brigade Headquarters was only what had been willed to it by General Martin, a master organizer, when he was relieved just before the battle.

The 35th Division was, in effect, a number of small units, companies, battalions and regiments, waging little individual wars against a well organized and well directed enemy. The higher command, which should have held together and directed the efforts of these smaller bodies as a unit, had lost its cohesion and had ceased to be a factor.

Exermont never was much of a town and the intense desire for it in the high command of the American Army was because of its position and the fact that it had been strongly fortified by the Germans. It blocked the way. For its further defense the enemy had brought into it since the beginning of the Argonne Battle, large numbers of veteran machine gunners. These were in the prepared emplacements in the town and scattered over the open field between Montrebeau Wood and the Exermont Ravine.

The first to make the attempt on Exermont was Major Kalloch with about 125 men, mostly of the 137th Infantry. Kalloch was beaten back and his command was virtually destroyed. He left his dead and wounded on the field. After him came Major James Rieger, a devout man, who was not in the custom of spending his Sunday mornings in such a scene. His battalion had suffered heavy losses, for it had been through all the fighting at Vauquois Hill, the Bois de Rossignol, at the taking of Charpentry, Baulny and Chaudron Farm and the Montrebeau Wood. Those unwieldy French names for places were hardly known to us then, but they will live in history as long as Missourians and Kansans read of martial deeds and revere their soldier dead. The little dots on the map of France were that day passing from the obscurity of rural villages, to the blaze of flame in the Midlands of America thousands of miles across the sea.

Rieger formed the remnants of his battalion behind Montrebeau Wood, intending to pass through it for the sake of the shelter it would give against enemy fire, and to advance directly from its upper edge towards Exermont. Colonel Nuttman, commanding the brigade met him just as he was entering the wood and insisted that Exermont lay "that way," pointing due east. Rieger assured his superior officer that he was wrong. Nuttman insisted that he was right and gave a direct command to move in the direction indicated. Rieger was thereby compelled to pass to the right of Montrebeau Wood and thus expose his command to the enemy fire for a much longer space of time. Naturally he got many additional casualties because of this.

It was broad daylight when he turned the last protecting corner of Montrebeau Wood and faced across the open ground. The field ahead of them was thick with machine gunners, placed there during the night, rifle fire from every protection was brought to bear on the attacking troops, artillery from three sides pounded them. Rieger's men had been without warm food for four days. They were chilled with the rain and they were extremely tired because of the constant work of battle.

So heavy was the fire from the front that men were seen to turn their faces from it while still advancing, as one will do in a gale of wind.

The command was "Forward." There was no barrage and if General Berry's artillery was aiding the infantry, the infantry did not know it. That was the General Berry who spent so much time at Camp Doniphan trying to get rid of Major Rieger, and this was the Major Rieger that stayed. Both had reached the day of supreme trial.

Across the open field the worn infantry went, the losses growing heavier every minute. Across the little valley of Exermont and the creek. Fairly against the town they charged and they took it, grimly killing the enemy machine gunners at their guns, and bombing the dug outs with awful thoroughness. Through the town they passed and to the heights beyond. There they dug a line and held it, and there the 2nd Battalion, the 139th Infantry and the 35th Division reached the height of their glory.

Captain McQueen was badly wounded in Exermont; Lieutenant McManigal was shot through the chest and with Private Joe Simpich lay three days without care or attention. This story has been told in detail in the first chapter of "From Vauquois Hill to Exermont."

Of all of McManigal's detachment in the desperate move on Exermont, Leroy Moss, who did as much fighting as anyone else, was the only man who was not either killed or wounded.

Not far behind Rieger came Delaplane with part of the One Hundred Fortieth, making firm and sure the American occupation of Exermont.

On the field behind these advanced units, in Montrebeau Wood, about Chaudron Farm and on both sides of it, the troops were suffering as the result of confused orders and loss of capable officers. On our right, Colonel Walker commanding the 69th Brigade had ordered two advances and a retirement. Ristine, again with his own division, reached that part of the field as the troops were coming back. He tried in vain to stop what elements he met, declaring he had later orders from high authority that the whole division was to advance and support the forward troops. He was too late, but if there had been another like him the farthest advance might have been held.

Colonel Walker's message ordering a withdrawal and an officer patrol from Colonel Mitchell reached Exermont about the same time. Delaplane evacuated the town and fell back slowly and in order. Behind him came Rieger's outfit fighting constantly over the ground they gave up. On three sides of him the enemy pressed forward with infantry and automatic riflemen. Rieger's splendid rear guard action brought his outfit safely back to the Engineer's line.

An act of merit and justice which followed was the promotion of Rieger for gallantry in action. He was always loved by his men for his unflinching kindness and humanity, and this reward of his bravery and skill in battle thrilled every heart.

The widespread belief that the armistice would end the war for the 139th Infantry was soon disproved. The winter of 1918-19 in the Commercy area was a most dreary one. The army command thought it would try to make soldiers out of the men. The riddled ranks were filled with replacements and beautiful military problems were worked out in the rain and mud.

The men were as a rule in unheated billets, hay lofts and the like, and there was the chronic shortage of clothing. Colds and pneumonia grew alarmingly and Major Smith and Col. Ristine wrestled unceasingly with the Divisional command to have the drill hours reduced and to give the men a chance to keep their health.

Each man was entitled to a razor. The requisition for them had been sent in at Doniphan, and they finally were received, after many urgings, after the armistice. Though the men were cold, wet and for long periods unbathed, they must be clean shaven.

E COMPANY

The Regimental Sanitary Officer was Captain Earl Ristine, a brother of the Colonel, and the excellent condition in point of sanitation the regiment had is the highest testimonial to his efficiency. He had been a director of playgrounds in Chicago before the war and was especially well qualified for the task of directing regimental athletics.

Chaplain Collins doubtless was an excellent Chaplain, but the regiment remembers him as a soldier. He had been the Regimental Chaplain of the old 3rd Kansas and was with the One Hundred Thirty-ninth throughout all its activities. He would have been just as successful as a commander of a company. He always found his duties led him to the front line.

Major Smith was the Regimental Surgeon. He had served through the Spanish American War as a surgeon with Funston and throughout his service with the One Hundred Thirty-ninth he exposed himself with reckless daring whenever he could work more effectively with the wounded. Much of the efficiency of the 139th Infantry is due to him and the manner in which he handled the medical and sanitary business of the regiment.

All that Commercy area period is best forgotten. No outfit was gladder than the 139th Infantry when the order came to pack up and move to Le Mans. They sailed for home proved soldiers of the greatest war, they took their parades and marched under the welcoming banners with the same step that they had crossed the Hindenburg line, and the fields of the Chaudron Farm. They got out of the army as quickly as they could and went home to mother and hot biscuits.

E COMPANY

They do not like to talk about it yet. There really is not much of it that makes good telling at the supper table. Many a mother wonders why Jimmie who used to be such a talker, is so silent on the topic of the Great War. She must wait a while. It is too new. Let the memories begin to mellow and ripen, and she will hear some mighty tall tales of the things her boy did in France.

APPENDIX A

HEADQUARTERS 139th INFANTRY, A. E. F.,
January 1st, 1919.

General Orders

No. 1.

1. The Regimental Commander takes great pride and pleasure in citing in General Orders his appreciation of the courage and devotion to duty of the following named officers and enlisted men for gallantry under fire during the six days battle from September 26th to October 1st, 1918.

On the morning of September 26, Lieutenant Colonel James E. Rieger, 138th Infantry (then Major, 139th Infantry) with his battalion, made the frontal attack on the heights of Vauquois, capturing this almost impregnable position in forty minutes. Reorganizing his battalion he pushed forward and on the evening of September 27th, without regard for his own safety, personally led the charge into Charpentry with such speed and dash that a large body of the enemy were cut off and captured. This advance required wading the Aire River, passing through an artillery barrage and heavy machine gun fire. He participated in every advance, encouraging the men by words and deeds. He, with his battalion, captured the foremost point reached by the Division. Unexcelled in soldierly qualities, admired and respected by his fellow officers, and loved by the men with whom he fought, this officer has set a high example of leadership.

Lieutenant Colonel Clay C. Macdonald was formerly Division Postmaster. During the Argonne offensive there were many casualties of Field and other officers. Lieutenant Colonel Macdonald (then Major) came forward and asked to be assigned to the firing line. He was assigned to command a battalion of the 137th Infantry. He took charge with courage and determination, successfully accomplished a difficult mission of reorganizing this battalion and holding the left end of the Divisional sector. This officer is sixty-one years of age, and has been cited in Division orders for his work in the Argonne offensive.

Major Henry D. Smith, Regimental Surgeon, 139th Infantry: all through the Argonne offensive Major Smith fearlessly exposed himself to heavy enemy artillery and machine gun fire in order to search out and relieve the suffering of the wounded men. On September 29th and 30th, he established his first aid station in Baulny, which was under severe artillery fire, and maintained it there, in order that he might the sooner give first aid to the wounded. During a strong enemy counter-attack when it seemed probable that the enemy would retake Baulny, and some special units were packing up preparatory to going to the rear, Major Smith said that he was going to stick there and care for those wounded men if they were all captured. This officer was recommended for promotion.

Calm and cool under fire, Major Samuel G. Clarke, 139th Infantry, commanding the First Battalion, set a splendid example to his men. Several times when his battalion was held up by machine gun fire, Major Clarke went forward in advance of his lines to better direct the movement of his men. On September 27 while performing this highly important and very dangerous work he was severely wounded, and with four machine gun bullets in his body continued to direct the movement of his battalion and refused to go to the rear until ordered to do so by the regimental commander. This officer was recommended for promotion.

On September 27 Major Randall Wilson (then Captain) was given the difficult and highly important mission of securing and maintaining combat liaison with the 28th Division, which was operating on the left of the 35th Division. In order to perform this duty his command was required to move over difficult terrain and cross the Aire River. This was performed in the face of violent machine gun fire from the enemy then located in the village of Montblainville. On September 29th and 30th, Major Wilson, with his command, held an advanced post north of Chaudron Farm and covered the evacuation of 140 wounded men from that place, remaining on duty for twenty-six hours and repelling numerous attacks made by the enemy, and he did not retire to the new lines being held by the Division until the last man had been evacuated.

Major William C. Williamson (then Captain) while commanding the First Battalion, 139th Infantry, on September 29 and 30, took an advanced position north of Baulny near the north edge of Montrebeau Woods, organized and held said position so as to allow an advance force to retire, and defeated two counter-attacks made by the enemy, this was done under continuous artillery and machine gun fire. On September 30, while in command of said battalion he reorganized a defensive line on Chaudron Farm and defeated a determined enemy attack.

In order to get food up to his regiment Captain Charles J. Hall, Supply Officer, turned his supply train off the main highway and drove it across the fields in order to get around a jam which was blocking the traffic on the highway. After getting around the jam he resumed the main highway, which was under direct observation of the enemy and being shelled continuously. As he neared Baulny his difficulties increased, as the shelling became more severe and mixed with gas. He lost 19 horses and had five wagon tongues shot off, but persevered and made it into Baulny with 22 wagon loads of food which contained seven days rations for 4,000 men; and for several days furnished rations to almost the entire Division. This officer was recommended for promotion.

On September 26 Captain J. W. McQueen personally led his company to mop up Vauquois and Bois du Rossignol, and captured many prisoners and war material. On September 27 he led one of the attacking companies against the enemy line of Charpentry and Baulny, the attack resulting in the capture of Charpentry, Baulny and Chaudron Farm buildings, his company reaching the ridge east of Montrebeau Woods and maintained its position there notwithstanding the assaults of the enemy. He personally led his company in the attack on Exermont, which resulted in the capture of that town. He advanced with his company beyond the town, and while driving off an assault by the enemy was seriously wounded. This officer was recommended for promotion.

Captain Henry F. Halverson, 139th Infantry, led his company with spirit and determination. On the evening of September 26, upon the death of Major Stepp, he assumed command of the battalion. He assisted in the capture of Charpentry and Montrebeau Woods on September 27, and by his splendid example of courage and self-sacrifice inspired his troops to make these advances through destructive artillery and machine gun fire. On September 29th, during the attack on Exermont he was gassed and wounded, but refused to go to the rear until ordered to do so by the regimental commander.

On September 27, Captain John D. Heiny organized men separated from the front line and turned them over to company officers and assisted in the organization of disorganized units under enemy fire and though wounded twice (marked severe) remained on duty during the entire action. Went through barrage and gave our artillery location of enemy batteries that were doing great damage to our troops, this notwithstanding great personal danger. On the night of September 29th he remained in the first aid station at Chaudron Farm, and assisted in the care and evacuation of the wounded. During the entire action this officer showed great bravery and gallantry in action. This officer was recommended for promotion.

Captain Matthew Guilfoyle (then First Lieutenant), led his platoon against machine gun nests near Charpentry, with spirit and determination. On September 26 assumed command of Company I, and assisted in the capture of Charpentry, advancing through destructive machine gun and artillery fire with such rapidity that many prisoners were captured. Reorganized and continued the advance, capturing and pushing on beyond Chaudron Farm. On September 29th, when all other officers senior to him had become casualties, assumed command of the battalion until the regiment was relieved.

E COMPANY

During every advance Captain Ralph W. Martin, was always in front and by his calmness and qualities of natural leadership inspired everyone near him. On the morning of September 28, while his battalion and adjoining units were held up by destructive machine gun fire from both front and right flank, he led a patrol around the right flank, reducing machine gun nests and protecting the advance on Montrebeau Woods.

1st Lieutenant Donald M. Macdonald, was the first of the regiment to make the supreme sacrifice. In the early hours of the morning, September 26, Lieutenant Macdonald while gallantly leading his platoon and considerably in advance thereof, started to dash up the heights of Vauquois when he was killed by a machine gun bullet, but his spirit lived on in his splendid example of courage and gallantry, in the determination with which his men avenged his death in the capture of Vauquois.

1st Lieutenant Coburn Hull, on September 27, without regard to personal danger, led his company in the attack behind the tanks against the defenses of Charpentry, passing through a dense artillery and machine gun barrage. His company had suffered severe losses and it required an officer of exceptional ability and courage to handle the situation. He reorganized his company and that evening led it in a gallant attack, assisting in the capture of Charpentry. He was pushing forward beyond Charpentry when he was wounded. This officer was recommended to be a Captain, but failed to receive this merited promotion on account of being dropped from the rolls of the Division by reason of being in a base hospital.

On September 26, 1st Lieutenant John W. McManigal personally led his platoon of Company H to mop up Vauquois and Bois du Rossignol, and captured many prisoners and much war material. On September 27 he led one of the attacking platoons against the enemy line of Charpentry and Baulny, the attack resulting in the capture of Charpentry, Baulny and Chaudron Farm buildings, his platoon reaching the ridge east of Montrebeau Woods, and maintained its position there notwithstanding the assaults of the enemy. He personally led his platoon in the attack on Exermont, which resulted in the capture of that town. He advanced with his platoon beyond the town, and while driving off an assault by the enemy was seriously wounded. This officer was recommended for promotion.

1st Lieutenant William H. Morse while acting adjutant of the Third Battalion, showed courage and resourcefulness under difficult conditions on September 26 and 27. He made personal trips from one end of the line to the other, encouraging the men and assisting in locating enemy machine gun emplacements, then disposing the trench mortars and one pounders so that they could be effectively used against them. While engaged in this highly important work Lieutenant Morse was severely wounded. This occurred about one kilometer south of Charpentry.

1st Lieutenant Homer J. Henney (then 2nd Lieutenant), gathered together a detachment of men who had lost their organizations and repulsed a counter-attack on the right of Montrebeau Woods on the night of September 28-29. The following morning he resolutely pushed forward with the detachment in the attack on Exermont, assisting in the capture of that place.

Chaplain Myron S. Collins, senior Chaplain of the regiment, in addition to his official duties as Chaplain in administering spiritual comfort to the wounded soldiers, ably assisted the regimental surgeon in administering physical comfort to the wounded. He worked without rest and without fear while under most severe artillery, machine gun fire and rifle fire. This officer was recommended for promotion.

1st Lieutenant George T. Worthen was in command of a company in the Argonne fight, and although suffering from mustard gas burns he stayed with his troops during the entire fight. He was always found at the head of his troops when an attack was on, and performed all of his work most excellently. This officer was recommended to be a Captain, but failed to receive this merited promotion on account of being in a hospital and having been dropped from the rolls of the Division.

1st Lieutenant Edward S. Carmack had been in charge of the message center some time prior to the Argonne fight, and was in charge of same during the fight and did excellent work as such. Although he was gassed in the early part of the fight he did not permit himself to be evacuated until after the order for the relief of our Division had been received. This officer was recommended for promotion.

1st Lieutenant George H. Stephens was regimental scout officer in the Argonne fight, and did excellent work as such until he was wounded. He was severely wounded with a fragment of high explosive and while waiting to be evacuated was gassed. This officer was recommended for promotion.

In the drive commencing September 26, 1st Sergeant Harry R. Kelsey, Company E (deceased) was at all times at the side of the company commander. In the afternoon of September 27, while under very heavy shell fire, Sergeant Kelsey volunteered to carry a very important message from the company P. C., which was located about 100 yards to the right of the road leading north into Charpentry and about 1,000 yards south of Charpentry, to the battalion P. C., about 800 yards to the left of the company P. C. With no regard for his own safety, knowing the message was of the utmost importance and time valuable, he took the most direct route by which he must go through a very heavy barrage and cross the road swept by machine gun fire. 1st Sergeant Kelsey was killed while performing this great service.

1st Sergeant John J. Kirkpatrick, Co. M, on September 28, near Apremont, with great courage exposed himself to enemy machine gun and rifle fire from all sides while locating an enemy gun nest, against which he led a bombing attack. On September 28, after his Captain was wounded and the company scattered, he gathered together and organized as much of his company as he could find and attached himself to Co. D, 138th Infantry, and held the front line against a German counter-attack.

On the morning of September 26, at Varennes, Sergeant Frank J. Kilfoyle, Co. M, led an automatic rifle squad into the town under heavy machine gun and artillery fire, capturing a machine gun nest. On September 28 he led his platoon, after his platoon commander had been severely gassed, with great valor and courage thereby setting an example to all his men, against a German machine gun nest and line of skirmishers, forcing them to retire.

Sergeant Wayne C. Newcomb, Co. M, (deceased) was painfully wounded while leading his platoon against a German machine gun nest, but refused to go back to the hospital, remaining in command of his platoon and thereby setting a splendid example of courage to his men.

Corporal Albert E. Suess (wounded and missing) Co. M, on September 27 volunteered to carry ammunition through intense machine gun fire and a heavy bombardment, to the front lines near Charpentry. This ammunition was sorely needed. He later joined the fight, in which he was severely wounded.

Corporal Winfield F. Shahan, Co. M, as regimental liaison N. C. O., did on September 26, 27 and 28, with the greatest of courage and bravery constantly expose himself to heavy enemy machine gun and shell fire in order to help maintain liaison between the different companies and regimental headquarters. Later, on September 29, near Exermont, single-handed, he attacked a German machine gun nest, killing a number of Germans and while taking one prisoner was fired upon by another German machine gun and attacked by his prisoner. He was wounded in the right arm and being unable to use his rifle drew his pistol and killed the German attacking him, thereby making his escape.

On the evening of September 29, near Apremont, when the enemy counter-attacked, preparing their way by throwing smoke grenades thereby shielding our fire and succeeding in planting machine guns to check our advance, Corporal Frank L. Motley, Co. M, advanced single handed, killed the machine gunner and loader, jumped into the enemy nest of fifteen and thereby aided in breaking up the counter-attack.

Mechanic Benjamin E. Foust, Company E, displayed a high standard of bravery in the Argonne fight. On September 29th, after having one eye shot out and administering first aid to himself, showing no regard for his own safety, he refused to leave the field and remained administering first aid to the wounded men of his own organization and men of other organizations who were near. He continued his work through a gas attack, wearing his gas mask over the wounded eye.

F COMPANY

Private 1st Class Russell M. Dudley, Sanitary Detachment, displayed great gallantry in action. On September 27, near Cheppy, he went through heavy enemy artillery fire, without regard for his own safety, and carried Lieutenant Colonel Dickey, who was severely wounded, to the first aid station.

Private Herbert F. Stoffle, Sanitary Detachment, displayed great gallantry in action near Exermont, September 29th, going through an enemy artillery barrage to dress a wounded comrade who had one leg shot off. While attending to this patient the line was drawn back. He remained with the wounded man and was captured by the enemy. He assisted in getting his patient to a German aid station and thereby saved his life.

Private Cecil L. Smith, Co. M, was a stretcher bearer, and on the morning of September 26, near Varennes, with great courage and bravery advanced through machine gun and artillery fire to the aid of the wounded and assisted in bringing them to the dressing station. On the same day and on September 27, without thought of his own safety, voluntarily carried water through intense shell fire to the wounded who could not be carried back to the first aid station. On September 28 he refused to retire from his stretcher after being badly gassed, until it became necessary to assist him from the field.

Private Anton J. Benson, Co. F, showed exceptional bravery and a disregard for his own safety while working as a stretcher bearer in the Argonne battle. He continued his work through heavy machine gun and artillery barrages and when his comrades who were helping him were shot, he carried the wounded back alone. His work was the means of saving many lives.

Private George W. Wood, Co. F, while performing his duty as an automatic rifleman in the Argonne battle showed great bravery and a disregard for his own safety in advancing against the enemy. He had cleared the way of many machine gun nests and had worked his way to the farthest advance point. It was during an advance against a machine gun nest by himself that he was killed.

General Orders No. 2.

1. The regimental commander takes great pride and pleasure in publishing in General Orders the devotion to duty and wonderful accomplishment of the officers and men of the Supply Company. In the Argonne fight on September 28, this company took 22 wagon loads of rations to the front lines. The roads over which they must pass were heavily shelled by the enemy. Nineteen of their horses were killed enroute and five wagon tongues shot off from their wagons. The wagons had to be pushed by hand the latter part of the way, but they would not quit, and the 22 wagons containing seven days' rations for 4,000 men were delivered to Baulny, and were used to feed practically the entire Division for several days. As they shared equally the work and danger, the following should share equally the honor for their glorious service.

General Orders

No. 3.

1. The Regimental Commander takes great pride and pleasure in citing in General Orders his appreciation of the courage and devotion to duty of the following named officer and men of the Liaison Detachment, Third Battalion, 139th Infantry, during the six days' battle from September 26 to October 1, 1918:

2nd Lieutenant:

Andrew T. Kirk, (Deceased)

Sergeants:

Irwin, William, M., Co. I.

Chambers: Walter E., Co. K. (Then Corporal)

Wing, Norris N., Co. K.

Corporals:

Wilcox, James M., Co. K.

Stokes, Don D., Co. L.

Maxon, Emery L., Co. L.

McKinney, George, Co. M.

Wolfenbarger, Willard, Co. M.

Second Lieutenant Andrew T. Kirk (Deceased), Liaison Officer, Third Battalion, by his courage, high devotion to duty and calmness was an inspiration to his men. They all loved him and responded eagerly whenever there was a message to deliver or information to be obtained. Lieutenant Kirk was killed during the advance on Exermont.

The above named members of this detachment all displayed a very high degree of bravery, and it is impossible to single out one, or a few, as being the bravest and most fearless. Hesitation never entered the minds of these men when there was a duty to be performed, though such duty called them through the heaviest of artillery and machine gun fire. After the regiment had suffered so many casualties and the various companies had become badly disorganized, these men took automatic rifles and rifles from the dead and wounded, and assisted in strengthening the outpost positions on the right of Montrebeau Woods, on the evening of September 29, in a very heroic manner.

General Orders No. 4.

1. The Regimental Commander takes great pleasure in citing in General Orders the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of I. Company, 139th Infantry. During the recent Regimental competition to determine the best drilled company of the regiment, I. Company came out victorious with A. Company a close second.

I realize the great amount of work performed and the wonderful spirit shown by I. Company in preparing for the Division competition. You went out on the field with your clothing and equipment spotlessly clean. Your appearance and performance on the field was a credit to yourselves and your regiment. The judges specified the movements you were to execute and I have no quarrel with them for giving the company of the 137th or 138th Infantry one-half point more than you, but I do know that if they had made a rigid inspection of all companies first, and then given each company fifteen minutes to drill in order to show what they really could do, that you would have demonstrated that you were by far the cleanest, best equipped, and best drilled company in the division.

I and the Regiment are very proud of each and every one of you.

General Orders No. 5.

1. The Regimental Commander desires to publish in General Orders his appreciation of the Battalion Commander, Officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Third Battalion, 139th Infantry.

It was with profound satisfaction that the Regimental Commander after viewing the divisional contest to determine the best drilled Battalion in the Division saw the winning work performed by the Third Battalion, 139th Infantry and heard this Battalion acclaimed, without dissenting voice, to be the best drilled in the division.

You did not win because the other contenders did poorly, for their work was of a very high order, but you won because from the beginning your every action, every movement was uniform, harmonious and exact to perfection. It has been my privilege to see many contests of this character, yet I never saw better team work, better movement or better spirit, than in the contest you so deservedly won.

The entire regiment is very proud of you and the regimental commander desires to thank each of you and to commend you for your earned title as the best Battalion of the 35th Division.

INTRODUCTION TO ROSTER

When the idea of publishing a history of the 139th Infantry was first agreed upon, personnel adjutants, company commanders were instructed to make up rosters to be used in this history. These rosters were to contain the name of each man who had been a member of the organization, his rank, home address and his previous service record and his service in the Great War. The editor of this history has obtained such rosters and they are published herewith from the following companies: A, B, C, E, F, H, I, K, L, M and Supply Company. These rosters are believed to be nearly complete and to convey all the information for which they were designed.

The roster of D Company was made up July 19, 1918. The special history roster, if it ever had been made, cannot be found.

The G Company roster is not dated but it appears to have been made up during the tour of duty in Alsace.

The Machine Gun Company roster is dated August 18, 1918, and as in the case of D Company the editor has been unable to obtain a special history roster, if it was made.

The Headquarters Company roster is undated and no special history roster has been found.

The other units such as Brigade Headquarters detachment and Sanitary detachment are the best rosters obtainable.

There are doubtless some names which will appear more than once in these rosters. These will be officers or men who were transferred from one outfit to another and whose names got on both rosters. It has not been thought advisable to eliminate these names.

In the original rosters the serial numbers of the men were given. They are not used in this book as being of little value outside of the army.

Some of the rosters failed to credit the men with participation in the Saint Mihiel offensive, but they should have this credit as the division was reserve for that operation.

A key to the initials used follows:

OS, Overseas.
MA, Meuse-Argonne.
A, Argonne
St. M., Saint Mihiel.
MGF (?), Machine Gun Fire
TRFD, Transferred.
K, Killed.
KIA, Killed in Action.
MP, Military Police.

THEY WON THEIR SPURS IN BATTLE

1. Lieut. George T. Worthen

2. Lieut. J. W. McManigal

3. Capt. James H. McCord, Jr.

4. Lieut. Edward S. Carmack

5. Lieut.-Chaplain Myron S. Collins

DO YOU REMEMBER THESE TWO DAYS?

The upper picture was taken on September 30 in the trenches dug by the Engineers. The enemy had just started a counter attack which was promptly beaten off.

The lower picture was taken October 1, at the rendezvous in the open field near Cheppy. Surely you remember that day?

STEADY OF HEART, BUT SHAKY IN ENGLISH

ADDRESS OF THE FRENCH COMMANDER TO THE MEN OF THE 139TH

Fortress of Vaux

Address to the American Soldiers

The commander of this fortress is happy to wish his most hearty welcome to the American officers, sergeants, corporals and privates, who come and take garrison in this historical fortress and to express to them his feelings of high sympathy and best companionship.

He enjoys himself with the coming of these new companions in arms, glittering of tenacity in purpose and valor, full of clear energy and spirit.

The glorious President, Woodrow Wilson, irresistible champion of justice, pursuing high an ideal, put in the scales with his powerful hand the highest force of liberty in the world to assure the victory of the allied over the savage Huns.

The United States with their wonderful mind of organization, their colossal abilities, their huge supplies, succeeded the wonder of gathering armies like by enchantment, crossing the Atlantic with innumerable battalions and throwing them in the battle field of liberty. It is on that everlasting stream we placed our final triumph, our hope of finishing the utter defeat of the savage enemy whom we are struggling against for more than four years.

The fruitful and generous blood of the American soldiers already spread in the front of Chateau Thierry, Saint Mihiel, Verdun and Argonne, the splendid success of the Yanks obtained and that history had already been engraved on bronze tablets, are a certain warranty of which we can hope from them in future days.

The same generous passions, the same love of peace built on right, the same respect of the will of nations fill us up to the same degree. Our fraternity in arms is strengthened by the community of ideal and mutual esteem.

Hurrah for American people!

Fortress of Vaux 25-10-18.

The Commander.

WELL WON PRAISE

Following are some of the Divisional Orders in which men of the 139th Infantry are mentioned.
Headquarters 35th Division
American Expeditionary Forces,
5th August, 1918.

GENERAL ORDERS

NO. 59.

1. The Division Commander takes great pride in honoring the memory of Second Lieutenant Thomas Hopkins, 139th Infantry. Lieutenant Hopkins during a raid on July 20, 1918, and although not a member of the raiding party, voluntarily left his combat group, and, passing through the enemy barrage of artillery and machine gun fire, went to the rescue of a private soldier, who, wounded and crippled, had become entangled in the wire. Successful in reaching the wounded man, he himself was fatally wounded while assisting him to cover.

This brave and unselfish act, which ended a most promising career, is only an incident in this great world's struggle, but it serves to show that in the desperate hour of need the officer and enlisted man fight shoulder to shoulder in the brotherhood of arms.

II. The Division Commander desires to commend the soldierly conduct of the officers and enlisted men of the following units participating in a raid on Landersbach July 20, 1918:

American Units

GENERAL ORDERS

NO. 82

1. It is with great pride and pleasure that I make record, and publish in General Orders, my appreciation of the courage and devotion to duty of the officers and men of the following units under my command during the six days' battle against the picked troops of the enemy, from September 26th to October 1st, 1918:

The 110th Trench Mortar Battery,
Headquarters Troop 35th Division,
2nd Brigade Tank Corps,
Provisional Squadron, 2nd Cavalry, Troops, B, D, F and H.

2. The task of making of record the individual acts of courage and devotion to duty in the face of a most deadly artillery and machine gun fire is an impossible one, for many of them will never be known. No greater praise nor commendation to the officers and men of the units mentioned above can be bestowed than to say that they have performed the tasks set for them, in a spirit and manner worthy of the best ideals and traditions of the American Army. You have met and defeated picked divisions of the enemy. You never failed to respond cheerfully to whatever difficult and dangerous tasks may have been let for you to perform. You have accomplished these tasks with a fearlessness, courage and disregard of danger and hardship which fully justifies the pride which those at home have in you. VAUQUOIS, BOIS de ROSSIGNOL, OUVRAGE d' ADEN, CHEPPY, CHARPENTRY, RAULNY,

BOIS de MONTREBEAU, EXERMONT, are names that you may take just pride in passing on to your native States as having been the scenes of your feats of arms.

3. The spirits of our dead comrades are with us to urge us on to greater deeds in Our Country's Noble Cause. To their families and friends we extend our heartfelt sympathy. To our wounded we hope for a speedy and safe return to our ranks that they may add their great spunk and enthusiasm to those of their more fortunate brothers in arms.

4. I direct that this General Order be read to all units of this command at the first formation at which they are assembled after receipt thereof.

PETER E. TRAUB,
Major General, U. S. Army,
Commanding.

COSGROVE, JOHN D., Second Lieutenant

Deceased. 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Charpentry, France, September 26-27, 1918. As battalion intelligence officer, he repeatedly went in front of his own and adjoining battalions to secure information which he conveyed to regimental headquarters over fields swept by artillery and machine-gun fire. When the advance of his battalion was checked by destructive hostile fire, this officer, disregarding personal danger, conducted a personal reconnaissance, locating many machine guns and strongholds. He was killed while voluntarily leading and placing troops in advantageous positions to reduce these machine-gun nests. Next of kin, Mrs. Sarah Agnes Nare, 1002A Glasgow Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

DUNCAN, GEO. E., Private (First Class)

Company K, 139th Infantry. Upon seeing his brother killed by a bursting shell as he was leading his platoon forward, Pvt. Duncan displayed the utmost bravery and initiative in rushing forward, taking command of the platoon, which had become depleted by casualties, and was in danger of becoming disorganized, and leading it forward in the advance. Home address, E. L. Duncan, father, Dearborn, Mo.

FOUST, BENJAMIN E., Mechanic.

Company F, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Exermont, France, September 29, 1918. After having one eye shot out, Mechanic Foust refused to avail himself of the opportunity to be evacuated to the rear, but rendered first aid to himself and continued to dress the wounds of his comrades, until a heavy concentration of gas so affected his wounded eye that he was forced to go to the rear. His work was the means of saving the lives of many of his comrades. Home address, Miss Grace Foust, Columbia, Mo.

GENTRY, CARL C., Private (First Class)

Company D, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Baulny, France, September 30, 1918. In performing this courageous feat he was severely wounded. Home address, John Gentry, father, Twenty-first and Lulu Streets, Trenton, Mo.

GRISWOLD, LEVI W., Corporal.

Deceased. Company C, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action in the Montrebeau Woods, France, September 29, 1918. He was killed in the performance of this self-sacrificing mission. Next of kin, Mrs. Alice McAninch, mother, Yarrow, Mo.

HEINY, JOHN D., Captain.

139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Charpentry, France, September 27, 1918, in order to secure important information as to the position of hostile batteries he passed through the enemy's artillery fire and was twice severely wounded. In spite of his wounds he remained on duty throughout the entire engagement and gave assistance in the reorganization of advanced positions.

HINE, OTTO L. H., Captain.

Dental Corps, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action at Chaudron Farm, France, September 29-30, 1918. Upon his own initiative, Captain Hine (then first lieutenant) went to a dressing station in advance of the line, after the infantry had withdraw, and worked under heavy bombardment of gas and high explosive shells, dressing the patients and directing their evacuation. That night he returned to our lines through heavy artillery and machine-gun fire to arrange for ambulances and litters. Later he made another trip to the rear for the purpose of securing an artillery barrage to protect his dressing station. Through his exceptional courage and energy, all the wounded men were safely evacuated. Next of kin, T. S. Hine, father, 217 Court Street, Muskogee, Okla.

HOPKINS, THOMAS, Second Lieutenant.

Deceased. 139th Infantry. Near Wessering, July 20, 1918, he left his own post of comparative safety and voluntarily went through a heavy artillery barrage to rescue a private who was wounded and entangled in barbed wire. While engaged in this self-sacrificing effort he was killed. Next of kin, Mrs. Edna Hopkins, wife, 1124 Bittling Avenue, Wichita, Kansas.

KELSEY, HARRY R., First Sergeant.

Deceased. Company E, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Charpentry, France, September 27, 1918. Sergeant Kelsey volunteered to carry an important message from his company commander to battalion headquarters and, knowing the extreme importance of the message, proceeded by the most direct route through the heavy, machine-gun fire and artillery barrage, with entire disregard for his personal safety. He was killed while performing this heroic service. Next of kin, Mrs. Mattie Kelsey, mother, Easton, Kansas.

KEMMERER, BURTRUS, Corporal.

Company H, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Baulny, France, September 26, 1918. Seeing his battalion adjutant lying several hundred yards in front of our lines, and in great danger from heavy machine-gun and rifle fire, Corporal (then private) Kemmerer, with a total disregard for personal danger, went to the assistance of this officer and succeeded in carrying him to safety. This gallant soldier was himself wounded while performing this heroic act. Home address, John Kemmerer, 410 East Benton Street, Carrollton, Mo.

KILFOYLE, FRANK J., Sergeant.

Company M, 139th Infantry. Under heavy machine-gun and artillery fire, Sergeant Kilfoyle led an automatic rifle squad into Varennes and captured an enemy machine-gun nest, which had been inflicting heavy casualties on our forces, killing or wounding all the members of the crew, including a German major. Two days later he again displayed skilful leadership in organizing his platoon against an enemy counterattack, which was successfully repulsed. Home address, Mrs. Mary B. Kilfoyle, mother, 1015 Henry Street, St. Joseph, Mo.

MOTLEY, FRANK L., Corporal.

Company M, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Apremont, France, September 29, 1918. When the enemy was counterattacking, having succeeded in planting machine-guns behind a smoke screen, he advanced with utter disregard of personal danger and jumped into an enemy machine-gun nest where there were about 15 Germans. Single-handed, he killed the gunner and loader, and engaged the remainder of the Germans until he received help from his platoon. Home address, William B. Mitchell, uncle, in care of Meuller-Keller Candy Company, St. Joseph, Mo.

NORTON, EVERETTE C., Private (First Class)

Machine Gun Company, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Cheppy, France, September 27, 1918. After being wounded by a machine-gun bullet, Private Norton refused to be evacuated to the rear, but continued in his duties for two days thereafter, and only stopped when weakened by the loss of blood. Home address, Joseph Clarence Norton, Moran, Kansas.

OLDFIELD, WILLIE A., First Sergeant.

Company H, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Baulny, France, September 26-27, 1918. Sergeant Oldfield was in charge of his platoon when it was subjected to heavy enemy machine-gun fire, causing numerous casualties. By his word and example he held his men in line as a unit until nightfall, when they intrenched. Next day when the tanks appeared he led the charge upon the machine-guns which were holding up the advance. Inspired by his gallantry, his men went forward and cleared out the guns and assisted in the capture of Charpentry, with many prisoners. Home address, Mrs. Anna Oldfield, mother, Canton, Kansas.

PALMER, ALVA W., Corporal.

Company K, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action south of Exermont, France, September 28, 1918. When his battalion commander asked for a volunteer to carry a message to the battalion commander on the right, Corporal Palmer (then private) volunteered and carried the message through an area exposed to intense machine-gun and artillery fire. By this utter disregard for his own personal safety, and his example of bravery, he inspired all those near him. Home address, Cleve Finney, brother-in-law, Weston, Mo.

RIEGER, JAMES E., Lieutenant Colonel.

138th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Charpentry, France, September 27, 1918. He commanded the battalion which had, with conspicuous gallantry, captured Vauquois Hill and the Bois de Rossignol, and which was later held up for some hours in front of Charpentry by severe artillery and machine-gun fire. He placed himself in front of all his men, and, thus starting them forward, led them to the attack with such speed and dash that a large number of the enemy were cut off and captured. Home address, Mrs. James E. Rieger, Kirksville, Mo.

SEGRAVES, VICTOR L., Sergeant.

1st Battalion, Scout Platoon, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Baulny, France, September 28, 1918. Sergeant Segraves voluntarily formed and led a patrol against an enemy machine-gun nest, which was causing many casualties in his battalion, and captured one of the guns. With utter disregard for his personal safety he advanced alone on another gun of the nest but was severely wounded by the intense fire, in the performance of this heroic act. Home address, Mrs. Patrick Segraves, mother, Perry, Kansas.

SHAHAN, WINFIELD F., Corporal.

Company M, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action in the Meuse-Argonne offensive, September 26-28, 1918, and near Exermont, France, September 29, 1918. Corporal Shahan, regimental liaison noncommissioned officer, with great courage constantly exposed himself to heavy enemy machine-gun and shell fire for three days in maintaining liaison between his regimental headquarters and the companies in the front line. On September 29, he attacked, single-handed, an enemy machine-gun nest, killing several of the enemy and taking one prisoner. While making his way back to his lines, he was fired upon by another German machine-gun, which wounded him in the right arm, and was at the same time attacked by his prisoner. In spite of his wound, he killed the German with his pistol, and reached his lines in safety. Home address, Mrs. Flora Shahan, mother, Marion, Kansas.

WILSON, CARLISLE R., First Lieutenant.

Deceased. 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Montblainville, France, September 27, 1918. In order to establish and maintain liaison with the adjacent division, Lieutenant Wilson, although wounded, led his men along the valley of the Aire River and across a bridge through the heaviest kind of artillery and machine-gun fire. He died soon after this exploit from the wounds received. Next of kin, Judge J. C. Wilson, father, Bethany, Mo.

WORTHEN, GEORGE T., First Lieutenant.

139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Varennes, France, September 26, 1918. Arming himself with a rifle, Lieutenant Worthen personally led an attack on a hostile machine-gun nest which was holding up the advance, capturing the position and killing or capturing the entire enemy unit, including two officers. Home address, Mrs. Dora E. Worthen, wife, 2739 South Eighteenth Street, St. Joseph, Mo.

WRIGHT, EARL, Corporal.

Company I, 139th Infantry. For extraordinary heroism in action near Charpentry, France, September 27-28, 1918. After being wounded in the knee, Corporal Wright refused to be evacuated, but remained at his post for nearly 24 hours until his wounds became so serious that he was ordered to the dressing station. His example of bravery and fortitude was an inspiration to his comrades. Home address, J. F. Wright, father, Bucklin, Mo.

LIEUTENANT COFFMAN'S STORY

Headquarters 130th M. G. Bn.,
Office of Battalion Surgeon,
American E. F., Jan. 5, 1919.

From: John F. Coffman, Jr., Bn. Surgeon, 2nd Bn. 139th Inf.

To: Division Surgeon.

Subject: History of Sanitary Detachment, 2nd Bn. 139th Inf. during Argonne Meuse Battle, Sept. 25th to Oct. 2nd, 1918.

September 25th, 1918. Battalion was located in woods about 12 kilometers South-east of Vauquois. At 10:00 A.M. our Battalion Commander notified us that in a few hours we were to take part in an offensive against one of the German's strongest positions and that we should make necessary preparation and hold ourselves in readiness.

Immediately we had 12 men to report to us from each Company, making a total of 48 men, to act as litter bearers. There being no arm bands for these men, we quickly improvised one for each man out of an old blue blanket, stating specifically to them what their duties were to be and what was expected of them, at the same time going over various ways of administering first aid.

We then took the personnel of each Company separately and talked to them for one hour, going over the methods of checking hemorrhage and administering first aid. This was done to freshen their memories, as they had been given lectures along these lines numerous times. In talking to them we would draw an imaginary picture of every conceivable wound and then have them apply first aid, first on themselves and then on others, all the time assuring them of the necessity of keeping a good cool head. This all paid a large dividend, as was proven by the number of men that were wounded and reported to Aid Station with their wounds dressed in fine shape, either by themselves or by a companion laying close thereby, requiring only the necessity of evacuation. We then took our enlisted personnel for one hour, having them adjust various splints and administer first aid to various imaginary wounds, equipping all but two of them with two shell dressing cases (improved by using empty gas mask covers) containing 50 dressings. The other two were carrying 100 doses of Anti-Tetanic Serum, all that was available at the time. We then assigned two of our men to each of the Companies, instructing them of their duties and positions.

At 4:00 P.M. we received an order to move at 6:00 P.M. and take up our position which was just back of the front line trenches, one kilometer South of Vauquois in an old orchard. Right here we wish to state that there was not a single man in this Battalion but what knew this Battle was coming off in a very few hours and we are pleased to state that not a single one of them presented himself at the Infirmary with any form of sickness.

At 6:00 P.M. sharp we swung down the road in column of squads, marching in this formation for six kilometers, then in column of twos for four kilometers and into our position at 2:00 A.M. Sept. 25th, there waiting to perform the duties that we had so faithfully trained for during 14 long months. While laying there it started to rain and mist and a heavy fog started forming. At 4:00 A.M. we were informed by our Major that there was a dug-out about 100 meters to our right in the trench which we could use as a First Aid Station, so there we established our first Station. At this station we evacuated only one casualty, a man from the 129th M.G.Bn., wounded in the neck by a piece of Bosche shell. At 3:00 A.M. our barrage started and at 5:30 A.M. the Battalion went over the top. Here we wish to state that we figured it a poor policy to have only one Aid Station to the Battalion, as a direct hit by artillery would put us all out of commission, thereby leaving our Battalion in a bad way, so we there and then resolved to have at least two and some times three stations.

At 6:15 A.M. we went over the top, strung out behind our Battalion with no man closer to another than 20 meters, which was just as far as one could see in the fog. This formation was also necessary, as being spread out we could locate casualties. We advanced in this formation for 2 kilometers, only finding one casualty, that being 1st Lt. Malcomb McDonald who had been instantly killed by a burst of machine gun bullets. By this time, 7:30 A.M., we had taken Vauquois Hill and prisoners were being brought to the rear. We advanced about one-half a kilometer further and were held up for a time as we were then right behind our Battalion; here we established two Aid Stations, marked on map as 2A and 2B. 2A was established on the South side of a steep hill which was thought to be and also proved to be deflated. While we were informed about 11:00 A.M. that there were a great many wounded about 300 meters to our right in the woods; on looking around we noticed passing us about 30 German prisoners under guard. We explained the circumstances to the guards, stating that we needed litter bearers, and we had no trouble in getting these prisoners, after further assuring the guards that they could stay with us and in due time have the prisoners returned to them.

Our Chaplain, one of the most fearless young men we saw during the entire battle, volunteered to act as foreman over the Bosche litter squads, so he gave them "about face" and into the woods they went and in a very short time he had them littering in wounded on improvised litters such as limbs of trees with their coats on them, old bunks and blankets. We in turn dressed them and laid them along in rows on the ground on the side of the hill, as no better place was available. By 4:00 P.M. we had them all out, dressed and fairly comfortable, a total of 59 casualties. We then picked out eight of the most severely wounded and had them put on litters by the Bosche, called the two guards and turned the prisoners back to them with orders to litter these eight men to the rear as quick as possible. At 4:30 P.M. we turned the balance over to the advance litter bearers of the 140th Ambulance Co. Nearly all these casualties were from the 137th Infantry.

This work was performed under an almost continual artillery and machine gun fire. 2B was established in a trench which had been widened out and made fairly comfortable by Bosche prisoners under the supervision of our Dentist, Lt. Hine, and his assistant. He also used German prisoners as litter bearers and from here evacuated 19 casualties. One hour prior to establishing this Aid Station Lt. Hine was on the North side of Vaquois Hill and, after following the board walks past large, well constructed concrete caves and dug-outs, he noticed a crowd of men through the fog about 30 meters ahead of him. Not being able to distinguish who they were, he turned to his assistant, Private Wm. C. Myers, who was following him, and asked him if he thought they were Bosche. As the assistant affirmed his suspicions, Lt. Hine held up his revolver which he had in his hand, and while trying to make up his mind as to exactly what course to pursue, the Germans saw him and all held up their hands and started toward him. There were some steps leading up to a trench that led back over the knoll between Lt. Hine and the Germans, so he waved to them to go up those steps and counted 32 of them. Falling in behind them he took them across the valley and up into the trenches from where he had started that morning, turning them over to guards who were returning with other prisoners.

At 4:30 P.M. we went forward about one kilometer and established Aid Station Number 3 on the South slope of a deep ravine. From here we evacuated 21 casualties. Here we had the honor of a short visit by Major General Traub, who shook hands with all of us, inquiring as to what organization we belonged, stating that he was pleased to see the Doctors so close to the front. At 6:00 P.M. we again started forward, going about 2 kilometers without finding any casualties until we caught up with our Battalion, which was then digging in for the night on top of a hill. At this time it was dark. Here we established Aid Station Number 4. We lay here all night sleeping in shell holes. No casualties during the night. At daylight our Battalion advanced about one kilometer and were held up. We then moved up to an old cellar and there established Aid Station Number 5 at 7:00 A.M. Sept. 27th. Here we stayed until 5:00 P.M. evacuating 34 casualties. At 9:00 A.M. a runner came to us with a statement of several wounded men back South of us on the hill, so the Chaplain and I went back and dressed six men that had been severely wounded by one shell, procured litter bearers and evacuated them. We then started toward the road to get some water in our canteens as we had been told of a spring. We had not gone very far until the Bosche started dropping some shells quite close to us, so we dived into a shell hole. It had about four inches of water in it. The Chaplain hit the bottom and I on top of him. Here we lay for 30 minutes while 75 shells dropped around us, none further than 200 meters and several as close as 15 feet, which when they exploded would nearly burst our ear drums, caused by the concussion. While laying there I saw a little mouse run around the edge of the shell hole and dart into his hole; believe me, that is the only time in my life that I wished to be a mouse. After this had been going on for about 20 minutes I said to the Chaplain: "Do you suppose they are trying to kill a Doctor and Chaplain?" To this he was about to agree when I stuck my head over the top and saw 10 tanks coming down the road; these beyond question were what was being shot at, but the Bosche were over-shooting and the Chaplain and I in our shell hole were the goat. After this had quieted we gave our canteens to one of our men that was going past and he took them back to the dressing station with him. We then started back ourselves. While walking along I noticed two litter bearers coming along with a man on the litter, also noticed blood spurting in the air from the wounded man's shoulder. I ran to them quickly, had them lower the litter to the ground and very quickly tore off the dressing and clamped the arteries with two haemostats, applied dressing over all and sent him on back. This man proved to be Lt. Col. Dickey. He was at this time in very bad shape. We then walked forward to our dressing station again, it then being 11:00 A.M. We just got comfortably situated when they started dropping shells around us again, a few of them being gas shells. One very large one dropped about 50 feet from us, the gas quickly volatilized and was blown directly over us by the wind. I happened to be looking in that direction and saw it coming and yelled "gas" and into our masks we went, wearing them for about 15 minutes and it was all over. Lt. H. P. Lewis, who was with me, was at this time in a shell hole about 20 feet from me and did not see what was coming or did not hear me at first and thereby got a breath of it before he could get in his mask and get away. This gave him a severe headache, eyes watered and some vomiting. He then went to the rear, the last I saw of him.

At 5:00 P.M. our Battalion was ordered over the top again under our machine gun barrage. I was on high ground and could easily see them go over. Never shall I forget the sight as the men went forward against the Bosche artillery and machine gun bullets: the men tipped their heads forward and reminded me by their actions of cattle facing a hail storm. Every few yards a man would fall wounded. Just as the last Platoon of our H Company was forming to go over a large shell hit among them. This I saw and we quickly gathered our equipment together and ran down to them and pulled six of them into shell holes and were dressing them when two Bosche air planes swung down from the sky and started toward us up the valley firing their machine guns. They wounded nine of our boys in the back, as I dressed them shortly afterwards.

From here we established an Aid Station in a cement culvert four feet high, 3 feet wide and 30 feet long, marked No. 6 on Map. By this time it was dark, but we managed by the aid of candles to evacuate from here 42 casualties; would have the wounded littered into the ends of the culvert, dress them and line them along the ditches along each side of the road on the ground, as we needed the litters. We got an ambulance in a very short time, which worked with us all night. About 10:00 P.M. one of my men informed me that there was a dug-out just to the left of us about 200 meters, which was nice and dry. As it was raining we moved our Station, No. 7 on Map, there, continuing our work, keeping the wounded men in a dry place. Here we stayed working all night until 1:00 P.M. Sept. 28th, evacuating 65 casualties.

At 1:00 P.M. we again went forward about 2 kilometers to a place shown as St. Quenteen, just South from Baulny about 300 meters. Here we established Aid Station No. 8 in an old mine. We did not feel very comfortable here for the first hour as on examining the place we found about one ton of dynamite in one of the rooms. As we had a man in our detachment who had had experience handling it, he and one other volunteered to put it in a car and take it away, which they did. We then felt much safer. Here we worked all night evacuating 125 casualties, many of them wounded severely and when littered in were wet to the skin, as it rained the entire night. From here we had splendid ambulance service, having one every twenty minutes. This was remarkable as at this time we were only about one kilometer behind our front lines. Fully 75 per cent of our casualties up to the time of establishing this Aid Station had been caused by machine gun bullets. From here until we were relieved they were 75 per cent caused by fragments of shells. Did not have a casualty during the entire battle caused by shrapnel.

At 6:00 A.M. Sept. 29th we again went forward. At the bottom of the hill at Baulny we met Major General Traub for the second time, he again inquiring as to who we were and again expressed himself as being pleased to see the Doctors so close to the front. On going a few yards further we saw Capt. Nesbitt, Co. A 130th M.G. Bn., and he informed us that his Company had just been badly shelled further up along this road, so up the road we went dressing 11 casualties and had them littered back to Baulny. While going further up the road we had to keep down in a ditch on West side of road which had about one foot of water in it. We kept one behind the other, about 50 meters between men, as all along here the Bosche would snipe at one man with their Austrian 88, named by the men "Whiz Bangs." We finally came to a large stone bridge over a little creek that was running like a mill race; this affording some protection, we waited one-half an hour standing in water up to our knees. On looking around we noticed up the road and to the right about 200 meters was an old stone house standing against a steep bank. In this house we established Aid Station No. 9A at 10:00 A.M. From here we only took care of three casualties, keeping them with us as it had now become impossible to get out of here on account of artillery and machine gun fire. While here we watched the 28th Division take Exermont, which was one kilometer to our left. At 3:30 P.M. the shelling had let up considerably, so we sent two of our men forward with instructions to locate an appropriate place for our next Aid Station. These men being gone about fifteen minutes came running back with the information that our Infantry was falling back, so we went out and looking to our right saw that their information was true. Looking to the North we could see the reason for it, as there was what looked to us to be a million Bosche coming over a hill about two kilometers away. Without further hesitation we took our three casualties on litters and returned to the Aid Station at St. Quenteen, which had now been acting as our Regimental Aid Station.

At 9:00 A.M. Lt. Hine established Aid Station 9B at Baulny, from here evacuating 16 casualties, and then returned to St. Quenteen. At 10:30 A.M. Herbert Stoffe, one of our personnel, who had been detailed with G Company and was serving with them on the front line, and who was afterwards captured by the Germans, came in and said that he knew where there was a dressing station with lots of wounded, but they were being taken care of; but as there were quite a few of these men, thinking that he could be of assistance, Lt. Hine with his assistant accompanied him to Chaudron Farm, where he established Aid Station No. 10, evacuating altogether 80 casualties. There, after going into a room which was about half full of wounded men and asking if there were any who had not been dressed and receiving the reply that none of them had been dressed since coming from the field, he began to work. The first two or three he dressed and tagged, then to speed up with the dressing, he quit tagging, but soon the litter bearers brought them in so fast and as he was the only medical officer there at that time, he could only devote his time to placing them. That room, which was about 75 feet long and 20 feet wide, was filled and another room of the same dimensions and yet another and then the sheds and the barn received their portion. During this time heavy shelling was going on and the report that the line was falling back necessitated the withdrawal of several officers and men. By this means Lt. Hine sent back word of his plight with the urgent request for help and for means of evacuation. Two gas attacks were also put over, which necessitated the adjusting of gas masks for the wounded that had them or could be supplied.

About 6 o'clock of this same day Captain Randall Wilson, who was holding the line out in front and who did hold the Germans from entering the dressing station with 75 men after doggedly fighting their way twice from the very walls of the place, came and asked how they were getting along. After he found out the condition he gave Lt. Hine 50 men to help with the work of evacuating the wounded. With these 50 men 37 men were evacuated on litters, improvised litters and riding guns. Then after an actual count by Lt. Hine and Lt. John D. Heiny, Regimental Intelligence Officer, who had also been helping hold the line and who had helped with the evacuation, there remained 95 litter patients, the walking cases having been sent back upon entering the Station. This was at 10:00 P.M. September 29th, 1918. At this time Capt. Wilson came in and asked if all had been evacuated. Upon being informed as to the true state of affairs Captain Wilson said: "Hell, Doc, you have got to get these men out of here by daylight. There are only 25 men between you and the Bosche. The main line has fallen back to the top of the hill about a half mile behind you." At twelve o'clock, midnight, after deciding that there was no help coming and that something had to be done, Lt. Hine got on a mule, which was in the barn of the farm, bare backed and with a rope halter, started back to get help or protection, and if possible both. On his way back he met a Lieutenant with a detail of 50 men coming to help, but as they had no litters he took them back to the dressing station at Charpentry. There the Doctor in charge gave him 5 litters, but that was not sufficient, so Lt. Hine went to the Major in command for help. The Major, Major Gist, said that there were no litters and that ambulances could not go past Charpentry under existing general orders. "Give me the order for the ambulances and I will go to the General and get the order removed," said Lt. Hine. "We have got to have action and I know the General will let them by." The Major wrote the order for the ambulances and the Lieutenant then started to see the General. In the square in front of the dressing station he met a boy asking for Major Gist. Upon finding that perhaps the order was from the General and pertained to the evacuation of wounded, Lt. Hine took him to the Major. There he found that two ambulances with 7 litters were to be used for this purpose. Loading the litters, 12 in all, on the ambulances and starting the detachment of 50 men forward, they all started for the farm. The ambulances could not make it up the hill, due to the steepness and the mud, so the 50 men took the litters and the ambulances were stationed at the bottom of the hill to carry the wounded from there. Knowing that all the wounded could not be gotten out of the way by daylight and that infantry protection could not be obtained, Lt. Hine got on his mule and went to the Headquarters of the 129th Field Artillery, hoping that protection could be secured from there. The Captain in charge could not get information enough in detail so he was sent to the advance observation post, which was at Balny. There he ran into a dug-out full of officers, principally Colonels, and after telling them the situation, with emphasis laid on the fact that only 25 men separated the dressing station from the Germans, he was promised a barrage across the road in front of the farm with quite heavy shell fire until all of the patients were evacuated. But his barrage was to begin at 4:30; it was then 5 minutes of four and Captain Wilson and his 25 men were across the road, so Lt. Hine again mounted his mule and made it down the hill to Charpentry and up over the hill to the farm in 15 minutes flat and got Captain Wilson and his 25 men back before the barrage started. Not knowing what else to do, Captain Wilson went back to report that he had withdrawn. All followed the men back, but about 100 meters out they met four men with a litter, so Lt. Hine, his assistant and the four men with the litter went back and got 3 more wounded men. Thinking that with all the protection gone, no means available for evacuation and daylight nearly there about 45 or 50 wounded men would be found there by the Bosche when they came over looking around next morning. When the last of the three men there were being put into the ambulance Captain Wilson had reported and had been told that he was not intended to withdraw entirely, so he came up and said that they had to go back in. Captain Wilson at that time had only 12 men left, but as they went through the line where the Infantry was dug in he took 12 more men. When they took up their position again it was already daylight. Captain Wilson promised to hold off the Dutch to the last man and Lt. Hine first went to Major

Smith, his Battalion Medical Commander, and he helped him secure Lt. Deal and about a hundred men to help. They then went back again to Major Gist and, as he had two ambulances full of litters coming, they waited and while waiting Major Gist had a cook fry up a mess pan full of pan-cakes with butter and molasses for each, which they will never forget. The litters came and Lt. Deal and Lt. Hine took the men and litters up over the hill through one of the worst shellings a hill ever got. A report that about a third of the litter bearers were being employed to carry a fellow litter bearer back later came to the dressing station.

It was about 1:00 P.M. September 30th that Captain Wilson came back to find out how near the work of evacuation had been completed. There were only two Americans, who were wounded so badly that it was thought they could not live and who were unconscious, and 5 Germans left. Captain Wilson said: "Well, I have just seven men left. They are all my men and they will stay on the job to the last one." They waited until 3 o'clock and no more litter bearers came, so Lt. Hine again went for litter bearers. He went to the Lt. Colonel of the Regiment who replied: "Give him anything he wants," so he took 50 men and started back to the Farm, but as he started up the hill that had been the "Waterloo" to the ambulances the night before he met 4 men carrying a German and he recognized the German as one that was in the Dressing Station. He stopped them and asked what was left and they replied that he was the last one. It was 5:00 P.M. Sept. 30th. Lt. Hine reported to his Medical Major that the job was completed. He was then sent over to Charpentry for ambulances to evacuate dressed men that had accumulated in the Regimental Dressing Station. No ambulances were to be had so he took a truck, but getting only about half way back and getting stuck he went back to wait for an ambulance. At 10:30 no ambulance had showed up so he went to the Major and the Major said that they had been evacuated.

Work all over, Lt. Hine reposed on a litter, but one hour of slumber was enough, as he froze out. Major Kieger, the Battalion Commander, seeing him up and around invited him to share his bed, which was a 14 inch board nailed against the wall and one blanket. This they both occupied until 3:30 P.M. Oct. 1st when an orderly brought word to the Major that they were being relieved.

Then came a three days march from the lines, and being nearly overcome from dysentery, bronchitis, diarrhoea and a slight attack of gas, Lt. Hine was evacuated to a hospital.

Now, going back to the remainder of the Detachment: At 5:00 P.M., Sept. 29th, we left St. Quenteen, as there was plenty of help there, going back South one kilometer and there establishing Aid Station No. 11 at the same place where we had Aid Station No. 7. On arriving we found about 40 men laying asleep and on questioning them we found they represented nearly every unit in the Division and that they had become lost from their organizations. We put them in charge of a Sergeant and instructed him to take them up to the front and attach themselves to some fighting unit, as they were needed badly. Only about one-half of them had guns, but there were plenty of them laying around that had been left by men whom we had evacuated the day before, also plenty of ammunition. So we soon had them all equipped and off they went without hesitating. The spirit of the men at all times was something wonderful; on numerous occasions we would find small groups of men lost from their organizations and on explaining to them that they should attach themselves to the first unit they found, they would cheerfully go forward and do so. All they wanted was just some one to suggest what to do and they were always found ready and willing. At no time did we see a man going to the rear unless it was to perform a specific duty that required going there. We did not evacuate a single medical case during the entire battle. We were not bothered by a single malingeringer. One peculiar incident while here was that a young man was brought in on a litter with a machine gun wound in left arm and left leg and while dressing his wounds I noticed that his skin felt quite hot and I said to him: "Young man, do you feel as though you had some fever, or do you feel bad any other way?" He replied: "Doctor, my throat has seemed a little sore for a couple of days." On examination I found a typical diphtheritic membrane over each tonsil and onto the uvula. I said to him: "Why didn't you report to a Doctor?" He replied: "I was not very sick; besides I wanted to stay here in the drive with the rest of the boys, and I was afraid if I saw a Doctor he would send me back to a hospital." This young man sent me word from a hospital in Southern France a few days ago stating that he was real well. From this Station we evacuated this time 16 casualties.

At 8:00 A.M. Sept. 30th we again went forward about one and one-half kilometers and established Aid Station No. 12 in a dug-out between Charpentry and Balny, evacuating from here 14 casualties. We stayed here until 4:30 P.M. Oct. 1st when our Battalion was relieved. We marched South about 7 kilometers, arriving there about 11:00 A.M., where we pitched tents and stayed for the night. We here established Station No. 13, evacuating 3 casualties, caused by mustard gas burns received during the battle.

Strength of Battalion when we took up our position on September 26th 2:00 A.M. was 22 Officers and 962 Enlisted Men.
